Portfolio Advisor Quarterly Commentary as of 12-31-2011

As temporary forces began to dissipate, U.S. growth re-accelerated to 2% in the third quarter. In addition, early estimates suggest that U.S. growth will reach 3% for the fourth quarter of 2011. Retail sales were mildly disappointing, posting a smaller-than-expected 0.2% gain for November. Recent data on unemployment insurance claims have been encouraging; initial claims have reached the lowest level since May 31, 2008. Headline consumer price inflation (CPI) may be starting to trend lower, while core inflation continues to trend higher. The Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) voted to leave its policy rate at 0% to 0.25% and retained the guidance that this target would remain low, until at least 2013. Over the quarter, the Fund returned 3.5% versus the benchmark return of 4.1%. During the period, the consumer staples and consumer discretionary sectors were the largest detractors from performance, while the information technology and health care sectors contributed positively. At the security level, Google and Intel contributed positively, while Amazon and Oracle detracted. The portfolio advisor believes that unemployment levels will only fall slowly, if at all in 2012. However, growth should remain at approximately 2.0% in 2012. Core inflation is expected to stabilize at or close to current levels of 2.1%. Next year, the portfolio advisor believes that oil prices will remain relatively flat. In 2012, the Fed will almost certainly leave the funds target rate unchanged at 0.25% over the forecast horizon, and may even indulge in another round of quantitative easing if growth disappoints. The risks to global growth appear skewed to the downside, primarily reflecting the general lack of momentum in the advanced economies and potential fallout from the European debt crisis.
